Le Brasilia campsite has installed rustic urban furniture made of wood and corten steel, along with St-André barriers, enhancing both safety and the natural surroundings' visual appeal.

Yelloh! Village Le Brasilia campsite, located in Canet-en-Roussillon, has enhanced its outdoor spaces with the installation of new urban furniture. The campsite has opted for a rustic and natural style that blends harmoniously with its surroundings. To achieve this, they have combined Gavarres benches with Tor benches and Tor litter bins, all made from treated pine wood and corten steel – a combination that fits beautifully into the site's green areas.
In addition, to improve safety at the campsite entrance, a fence composed of St-André barriers in a mars brown finish has been installed. These barriers not only separate pedestrian and vehicle areas, but have also been decorated with planters on top, adding a floral and aesthetic touch to the main entrance. A clear commitment to functional design and landscape integration in a privileged natural environment.
